Patient and public involvement (PPI) is a critical part of research. In recognition of this, more funders and institutions are requiring researchers to have PPI built into their studies and PhD programmes.

We have extensive experience delivering PPI in a range of studies, from large randomised controlled trials to small qualitative evaluations.

Our team often use their own lived experience in their role as PPI co-applicants and facilitators. We are now offering training for researchers to share our skills and knowledge about PPI.

Our new training programme is for researchers in any field looking to ensure good quality involvement that avoids tokenism and genuinely embeds lived experience knowledge into research projects. We share our experience across a range of PPI models, and provide interactive spaces to ask questions, get advice for your project and learn from people with professional and lived experience as both facilitators and members of PPI teams.

Over three sessions we work with a group of up to 10 researchers to cover:

- What is PPI? Models for PPI in research
- Running good PPI groups and working with young people
- Inclusivity in PPI

More information

Where
Online, using Zoom

When
Session 1: 27th Oct; Session 2: 10th Nov; Session 3: 24th Nov

Cost
£600 for three 2.5 hour sessions plus course materials

How to book
For questions and booking please email us: contact@mcpin.org